What's an article?

An article is a short update from the ground — a situation report, a report from the field, or everyday community life, tagged by topic. Unlike a Story (a single photo and caption), an article has a title, a cover image, and a body you build block by block: paragraphs, headings, quotes, and sourced images or videos.

What you'll need

- ✓ A Google sign-in. Writing requires signing in — it's what lets you save drafts and come back to finish later.
 - ✓ A title. Short and clear.
 - ✓ A cover image, with a source and an optional caption.
 - ✓ Your body text, built from blocks — at least one paragraph, plus any headings, quotes, images or videos you want to add. Every image or video block needs a source.
 - ✓ Your display name — how readers will see you — and, optionally, the place you're writing from.
 - ✓ 1 to 3 tags describing what it's about, and your language — English or Nepali.

How it works

- 1 Sign in and start writing. Your work saves as a draft automatically as you go — close the tab and come back anytime.
- 2 Build it block by block. Add a cover, then paragraphs, headings, quotes, and sourced images or videos, in whatever order tells the story.
- 3 Submit it for review once your title, cover, at least one paragraph, and tags are filled in.
- 4 A moderator reviews it before it goes live — this keeps what's published honest and grounded. If it's rejected, you'll see the moderator's reason and can revise and resubmit.
- 5 Once approved, it's published under your display name and place — readers can view, like and share it, and it keeps a simple count of each.

Good to know: your account email is never shown publicly — only your display name and place appear on the published article. Write about what you've actually seen or experienced; that's what makes an article worth reading.
